Version history AutoCAD started out as an AutoTrader-style time-saver when it was first released. It was called AutoDraft in 1982. The next version was named AutoCAD. The first retail software version was AutoCAD 1.0, released on December 19, 1982. From AutoCAD 2.0, released in September 1983, there were many new features such as a type tools palette (for creating new objects), graphics tablets, and workgroup lists. In December 1984, the first version for the Apple II was released. The first version released for the IBM PC was AutoCAD 2.0, released in September 1985. Version number changes Before the 10.0 release, the AutoCAD product number changed each time a new major release was released. However, since the product number is now incremented in multiples of 100, the 10.0 release was actually AutoCAD 10,10,10.0 or 10.10.10.0. The reason is that when a product number is incremented in multiples of 100, every 100th digit is incremented. The new product numbers could be easily differentiated by observing that the first digit did not increase when the product number was incremented. For example, product 10.0.10.0 and product 10.10.10.0 are both 10.01.10.0. In AutoCAD 2014 and later releases, the number changes when the first digit changes. The first digit does not change when there is a major version change. When there is a major version change (so there is a change of the first digit), there is also a change in the third digit (the second digit), which also does not change when there is a major version change. Thus, AutoCAD 2014 and later releases have the format 10.XY.ZXY.Z for the product numbers. For example, AutoCAD 2014 was AutoCAD 10.11.12.0, while AutoCAD 2018 was AutoCAD 2018.11.12.0. AutoCAD 2020 was AutoCAD 2020.11.12.0. In AutoCAD 2014, there was a new feature introduced, Revit, a program that resembles some aspects of building information modeling (BIM). It was released as a separate AutoCAD product, AutoCAD 2014 Revit. The AutoCAD product number for AutoCAD 2014 Revit was 10.

The board is expected to consider the proposal during a workshop Wednesday, as well as a report by the City Attorney's Office on some preliminary matters in the measure. The hearing is set for 3:30 p.m. in the board's meeting room at city hall, 301 Golden Gate Ave. "This is a step in the right direction," said Ean Sinclair, executive director of San Francisco Neighborhood and Community Housing Coalition, "to shift the financial burden off the current housing market that is being driven by out-of-town speculators." Airbnb — which lists homes as short-term rentals — has come under fire from city officials and tenants advocates in recent months for its ability to control housing market prices and its handling of complaints. The proposed measure would ban short-term rentals of "at least 30 days, and no more than 90 days" in each calendar year. It would also require short-term renters to provide a "complete list of residents" for each property listed. "We certainly have concerns with the rent control ordinance," Sinclair said. "We would like to see these short-term rentals taken out of the mix." The short-term rental measure is similar to a proposal that is already before the board, which requires long-term residents to provide a "complete and accurate" listing of their properties when they wish to rent them out. Critics say the proposed short-term rentals measure may violate anti-discrimination laws by favoring the current landlords. The measure, known as Ordinance 1455, was introduced by Supervisor David Campos and approved by the board in September. Campos' proposal, along with Mayor London Breed's Rent and Rehabilitation Ordinance, have been met with criticism by tenants rights groups for their strict limit on how much tenants can charge for rent. Sub-Taliban leaders announce that they will abide by the rules of the Islamic State Two leaders of the insurgent group formerly known as the Taliban have announced that they will abide by the rules of the Islamic State. The Taliban, who have been operating mainly in Pakistan, announced last year that they had formally split with the Islamic State (Isis) and that they would be negotiating with the government of Pakistan. In a video message to mark the anniversary of the Taliban's founding, a spokesman for the group said the order had come from the supreme council, led by the Taliban's new leader, Mullah Akhtar Mohammad Mansour. The group's leader, Mullah Omar, had previously promised that the breakaway group would adhere to the Taliban code of conduct. "We will not accept a deal or contract that would legitimise the occupation of our lands by the US and NATO," the spokesman said. The announcement follows a series of resignations from Taliban leadership after it was clear that the group was in line to join the Islamic State. Last month, Mullah Mansour was declared leader of the movement after he was chosen by the supreme council following the death of his predecessor, Mullah Akhtar Muhammad Mansour.
