In most games, only one piece may be picked up or captured, although the players may declare if they would like to exchange pieces. Checkers is not played with a traditional game board, but instead each player has a set of board pieces. The board pieces are placed on a flat surface and the game pieces placed on them. The game is played by moving the player's pieces in one of two colors, alternating moves, until one side captures the other's king piece. The player who captures all of the opponent's pieces becomes the victor. However, if the king is in the same square as one of the opponent's pieces, the opponent can "block" the piece and prevent the capture of the king, even if another piece is not covering the king.
